

Lynne Hamilton

Lynne Hamilton wears many hats. She is currently the President of the Internet Society --one of 160 Country Chapters around the world advocating for an accessible, affordable and open Internet. She also the Sitting Past Chair of the Board of Equal Voice a multi partisan not for profit aimed at getting more women involved in Politics. She was one of the original “mothers” of the “Daughters of the Vote” program that brought 338 girls across Canada (one from each riding) to sit in the House of Commons on International Women’s Day, last year. This marked the 100th Anniversary of some women securing the right to vote in Canada.

Her day job is running a boutique public affairs firm with clients mostly in the technology sector. She helps them navigate the political landscape and secure regulatory change. Most importantly, she is the very proud mother to her teen daughters Katherine and Jenny.
